Medical practice issues to watch in 2019

MGMA
2019 promises to be another busy year in healthcare. The 2018 midterm elections shifted the balance of power in Washington as Democrats now hold the gavel in the U.S. House of Representatives, creating a divided Congress with the Republican-held Senate. MGMA has identified the following legislative and regulatory issues critical for medical practices in the coming year. We will keep members apprised of key developments in these areas and their impact on medical practices and will continue to advocate for policies that enable practices to thrive in their mission to furnish high-quality, cost-effective patient care. AHA's Rick Pollack sees full agenda for year ahead

Health Leaders Media

The president and CEO of the American Hospital Association shares a bit about the challenges facing the nation's hospitals in 2019, and where he believes political headway can be made in a divided Washington. The next 12 months will provide plenty of challenges for the nation's hospitals. On the business side, hospitals are reconfiguring to meet the changing demands of their patients, as they contend with competition from nontraditional players who are edging into the provider space with the potential to upend care delivery.
